

If you have too much in assets, you are not eligible for Medicaid. However, if you spend your assets on your daily living expenses, medical care, or bills, you may reapply when your assets are lower.

If you have too much income, you may qualify under a “spend-down,” or you may decide to apply in a different eligibility group. This information and your eligibility worker will help you to decide which group is best for you and your family.